

Over 5,500 Police Chiefs, Sheriffs,
Prosecutors, other Law Enforcement
Executives and Violence Survivors
Preventing Crime and Violence

March 9, 2016

To All Members of Congress:

We are members of Fight Crime: Invest in Kids, a national organization of more than 5,500 law enforcement leaders. As police chiefs, sheriffs, prosecutors, attorneys general and violence survivors, we serve communities across every state in the nation. From our perspective on the frontlines of crime, mental health services must be available to those who need them. We are encouraged to see members of Congress in both the House and Senate beginning to take steps to address mental health reform. As that work continues, we urge Congress to address the mental health needs and preventative practices for children and adolescents in any final legislation.

As Congress addresses mental health reform, it is critically important to provide services and screenings for children and youth. Leading research indicates that half of all lifetime cases of mental illness begin by age 14, yet about 80 percent of children receive inadequate treatment.

In the United States today, about one in five adults experience mental illness in any given year. The majority of people who struggle with mental illness are not violent. For youth and adults with mental health disorders that could contribute to violent behavior, it is not just in their best interest, but in the interest of public safety that their mental health needs are addressed early on. Of the 1.5 million youth in the juvenile justice system, nearly seventy percent of them have a diagnosable mental illness. To diagnose and treat youth as early as possible has the potential to prevent future crime.

Unfortunately, those of us in law enforcement are left to deal with the repercussions of an inadequate mental health system. Untreated mental illness is far too often a factor for those we see in our jails, our courtrooms, and in violent encounters with law enforcement. The risk of a dangerous encounter increases when drugs or alcohol are present. When an individual has a mental illness plus alcohol and drug use disorders, their odds of engaging in violence is 26 times higher than individuals without mental illness or substance abuse disorders. As we commit ourselves to keeping our communities safe, we call on Congress to ensure that people are connected to appropriate prevention treatment to minimize the risk of harm to themselves or others and prevent instances wherever possible.

Children and their families face a variety of barriers when seeking mental health diagnosis and treatment. There is a serious shortage of trained psychiatrists and psychologists, particularly among those who specialize in children and adolescents.

Additionally, based on a technicality of current law, many families who rely on Medicaid for their healthcare services are not allowed to see more than one healthcare provider in a single day. This means that if a pediatrician refers a child for further diagnosis or consultation with a mental health professional, the family often must take an additional day off of work, take the child an additional day out of school, and incur additional travel costs to seek a second appointment. This is a challenge for most families, but especially for hourly wage-earners, single parent households, or those in rural or remote areas.

In the proposals before Congress, there are several key provisions that address youth mental and behavioral health. In the bipartisan Senate bill cosponsored by Sen. Cassidy (R-LA) and Sen. Murphy (D-CT), S. 1945, there is a new grant program to help states better coordinate access to children’s mental health professionals (Sec. 207). Building on what the majority of states already have in place, these grants would connect psychiatrists and psychologists directly to pediatricians for phone consultations and two-way trainings. Without infringing on patient privacy, pediatricians would have a direct line to specialists for help with necessary screenings, diagnosis, and referrals. This is a low-cost way to increase access to professional guidance, on the same day and to any participating location in the state.

We also support the proposal in that Senate bill to create a grant program specifically targeted to expanding preventative services for children (Sec. 204). This focus on early detection and treatment is critically important, and can radically change the child’s chances at a healthy life with proper symptom management.

Additionally, in a similar bipartisan House bill cosponsored by Rep. Murphy (R-PA) and Rep. Johnson (D-TX), there is an important provision to help troubled youth who entered confinement to receive mental health services when they return to the community, a time when they are proven most in need of services and statistically most at risk to reoffend. An amendment proposed by Rep. Cárdenas (D-CA) and adopted with bipartisan support, would enable states to suspend, rather than terminate, a youth’s enrollment in Medicaid, avoiding a potential lapse in mental health care while the juvenile reenters the community.

Finally, we support streamlining Medicaid to allow families to see more than one doctor on the same day, removing the unnecessary burden that deters people from seeking the care they or their children need.

On behalf of law enforcement leaders across the country, we call on Congress to reform the mental health system to promote greater access to prevention and treatment, starting in childhood through adulthood. This will help those individuals live healthier lives and greatly improve public safety nationwide.

Sincerely,
